the 1990s, the number of people in the United States who are 65 years of age or older has increased by 50% (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The number of people aged 65 and older is projected to increase to 20% of the total population by the year 2020 (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people aged 65 and older is due to the increase in life expectancy and the decrease in the birth rate (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people aged 65 and older has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are dependent on others for their care (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are dependent on others for their care has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in long-term care facilities (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are in long-term care facilities has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in nursing homes (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are in nursing homes has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in assisted living facilities (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are in assisted living facilities has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in independent living facilities (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are in independent living facilities has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in community-based care (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are in community-based care has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in home care (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are in home care has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in respite care (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are in respite care has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in adult day care (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are in adult day care has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in senior centers (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). The increase in the number of people who are in senior centers has led to a corresponding increase in the number of people who are in senior housing (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000). Figure 1. A schematic diagram of the experimental design. The subjects were divided into two groups: the control group and the experimental group. The control group received a standard training program, while the experimental group received a modified training program. The experimental group was further divided into two subgroups: the low-intensity group and the high-intensity group. The low-intensity group received a low-intensity training program, while the high-intensity group received a high-intensity training program. The subjects were then subjected to a series of tests to measure their performance and physiological responses.
